

Stephen Z. W.:

There's so many folks on the road, so many drivers. In today's day and age with cellphones and smartphones, so many folks are distracted. Pedestrian accidents are one of the biggest concerns that we have because when a vehicle strikes a pedestrian, the potential for someone being badly injured is very high even if a vehicle is going at a relatively moderate or slow speed, the injuries can be quite substantial.

Often times, we see these kinds of cases where the injuries are very significant and despite the fact that it's a vehicle striking a pedestrian, often times there will be a defense that it wasn't the car's fault or it was also the pedestrian's fault and we will have to do an investigation and prosecute the case to make sure the truth comes out that it wasn't our client's fault and that the car caused the collision to happen, the pedestrian knocked down to happen, but these are very serious cases. A big problem in a city like New York, very often big injuries resulting-