

Stephen Williamson:

Oftentimes people will ask us, "I've been out of work for two weeks or three weeks or some period of time because of the injuries from the motor vehicle accident. Can I recover my lost wages under New York no fault?" And the answer is yes, partially. If you are disabled from work for some period of time following a motor vehicle accident, the no-fault insurance for the car that you're in will cover your lost wages to a certain extent. Unless the person who owns the car and has purchased the insurance has bought additional no fault coverage, the limitation typically is $50,000 for medical benefits and lost wages from a motor vehicle collision.
